PARDONS ISSUED FOR FEDERAL MARIJUANA OFFENDERS

President Biden has issued an executive order directing all prior offenses of marijuana be pardoned! "We classify marijuana at the same level as heroin – and more serious than fentanyl. It makes no sense," After Biden's announcement, other agencies quickly followed suit with next steps. The Justice Department issued a statement that it "will expeditiously administer the President's proclamation" on pardons, and work with the Department of Health and Human Services to launch a scientific review of how marijuana is scheduled under federal law. If you have a marijuana conviction, contact NLPA.

HOME CONFINEMENT TRANSFER PROGRAM UNDER CARES ACT TO END

Shortly after the COVID-19 pandemic began in March 2020,

Congress passed the CARES Act, which expanded the BOP's authority to transfer certain qualifying inmates to home confinement in an effort to reduce the inmate population of BOP facilities thereby reducing the spread of the virus. In January 2021, the Dept. of Justice's Office of Legal Counsel issued an opinion indicating that once the COVID-19 pandemic had ended, the BOP was required to return to prison all inmates it had previously transferred to home confinement under its CARES Act authority. That opinion met with an enormous amount of criticism, which led the OLC to reconsider its position. On December 21, 2021, the BOP issued a revised opinion indicating the BOP is not required to return to prisoners previously transferred to home confinement. While this certainly is a more human and practical opinion than the prior one, it likely will lead to significant litigation depending on what criteria the BOP utilizes to return CARES Act inmates to prison.

UPDATED COMMISSION GUIDELINES & ACQUITTED CONDUCT

The United States Sentencing Commission recently proposed a major change to federal sentencing law, indicating that it may bar the use of acquitted conduct at sentencing where defendants have been acquitted of some charges but convicted of others. This would represent a major change in federal sentencing law. Currently, federal judges may sentence criminal defendants based on conduct for which the jury acquitted them. This is an incredibly unfair practice as it means that a defendant may go to trial on two charges, get acquitted by the jury of the more serious charge when the jury finds that the government could not prove the offense beyond a reasonable doubt, and then still be sentenced as if they had been convicted of the more serious charge.

Acquitted conduct is an offense for which the defendant was not convicted. For example, in many cases, defendant could be charged with guns and drugs at the same time. The penalties for federal drug offenses can be draconian on their own, but the presence or use of a firearm during the commission of the drug offense can result in mandatory minimums and federal sentencing guidelines that are exponentially higher. Federal judges take the guidelines incredibly seriously, so the guideline calculation is extremely important. Currently, there is nothing preventing federal judges from treating a defendant who has been convicted of a drug offense but acquitted of the firearm offense the same at sentencing as if the defendant had been convicted of both offenses. This can lead to a drastically longer sentence even though the jury partially acquitted. Federal judges also may often consider conduct for which the defendant was never charged.

The downside of the change being approved by the Sentencing Commission rather than the Court is that the change would almost certainly not be retroactive. However, this is an important change that strengthens the presumption of innocence and holds the government to its burden of proving a defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Criminal defendants should not be sentenced for things that the jury found that they did not do.

If the Court has used acquitted conduct to raise your sentence, contact NLPA.
